One trend I noticed this year is this idea of celebrity memorials. With the deaths of Paul Walker, Joan Rivers, and Robin Williams (as well as others that are currently slipping my mind) this year, there was an outbreak of impromptu digital memorials erected in honor of these individuals. It highlights the borderline deification of celebrities here in America, while other, arguably more important, issues take a back seat.

A digital illustration of the Titanic at night, sailing on a dark sea under a starry sky. The ship's four red funnels are illuminated from within, and the ship's lights are visible. A large iceberg is partially visible on the left side of the frame.
