This Student Recital is brought to you for free and open access by the The Caine College of the Arts Music Program Archives at DigitalCommons@USU. It has been accepted for inclusion in All Music Department Programs by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@USU. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@usu.edu.
Brooklynn would like to thank her wonderfully patient and encouraging instructors Brianna Krause and Lynn Thomas for their unceasing kindness and instruction. She would also like to specifically thank Dallas Heaton, Beth Foley, and the USU Choral Scholars for their contributions and hard work in preparing for this recital. Last—but not least! —a special thanks to her various professors, family, and friends for their support and understanding throughout her studies in Music Education. Brooklynn will be student teaching in Idaho Falls this upcoming Fall.

Thank you for your support!

Notes from the Composer

The inspiration for “Infatuation” came on a bus ride to a Chamber Singers performance last Spring. It all began with a conversation that led to some interesting poetry and eventually my decision to compose a cycle for my senior recital. I have always been fascinated with jazz chords and atonal music, and knew that I would like to experiment with those two elements throughout the cycle.

Thus, the first song, “Desire,” starts with a distinct jazz feel that slowly lends itself into atonality throughout “Devotion,” reaching its peak of pure 12 tone chaos by the third song, “Desperation”. During “Disconnection,” the music returns to coherent thought and settles back into mostly jazz tonality. In “Discovery,” as the singer recounts past experiences, some atonal themes return amidst the overall tonal structure, and it finally ends in full tonality if D minor.

As for the poetry and title, much of the piece revolves around the keys of D major and minor, so, somewhat fixated on this, I decided to title each piece with the alliterative beginning of “D.” The poetry is an allegory, of which the true subject is found during “Discovery.” Listen closely to the lyrics for the suspenseful reveal.

About the USU Choral Scholars

The Utah State University Choral Scholars were first established in 2013 as a group of friends who met together a few times a week in order to improve their sight-reading skills. As the group continued to rehearse, they soon developed a desire to perform together as an ensemble. The Choral Scholars’ first recital took place in the Spring of 2014 and has since been followed by many other distinguished performance opportunities. The Scholars have been featured performers with the USU Chamber Singers, the American Festival Chorus, and the Performance Practice Institute. In addition, the group has used its talents to reach out and develop important relationships with many local religious and charitable organizations.
