8-1-2011

Job Hunting? Some Good Advice

Center for Persons With Disabilities

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.usu.edu/cpd_blog

Recommended Citation

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Center for Persons with Disabilities at DigitalCommons@USU. It has been accepted for inclusion in Blog Posts by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@USU. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@usu.edu.
The latest figures for June 2011 show that the unemployment rate for persons with disabilities is almost 8 percent higher than that for persons with no disabilities—16.9 percent compared to 9.0 percent. Those numbers reflect a 1.3 percent increase in unemployment rate for people with disabilities compared to a 0.6 percent decrease for people without disabilities (2010 statistics).

That puts a lot of people with disabilities out looking for work. Not an easy thing to find these days.

For those who haven’t looked for work in the last decade, things have changed drastically in the employment field. There is an article written by Anthony Balderrama that outlines some of those changes and gives some good, solid advice about how to apply for a job, how to prepare for an interview, and the impact that the digital world has on this process.

We can all use as much help as possible when it comes to job hunting. Hope this article helps you out.