A TRIBUTE TO THE A. C. PRACTICE COTTAGE
older housekeepers who learned their lessons in the school of hard knocks.

True fortune is the man, he be father, brother or young husband, who has in his home a young woman who, with the confidence to handle the money he earns and puts with it the best results. The man whose home is clean and orderly, furnished in good taste, whose bed is sweet, smoothly made and refuted, and whose meals are wholesome, nourishing and appetizing, is indeed fortunate. When at the close of the day this same woman tastes, but not of necessity expects, a lovely, dressed list with him to read, counsel, or entertain their friends, with a body and brain well overworked because she has the knowledge and experience to carry on her work easily, her family is indeed blessed.

This is the ideal, the reason for the Practice Cottage, and what it means to the life of the family.
