MONDAY'S LYCEUM

Thoroughly stimulating was Monday's Lyceum number. G. F. Morgan's talk drew a warm response from every member of his crowded and intensely interested audience. G. F. Morgan has a striking personality and a sparkling sense of humor. To keep a college audience on the edge of their seats for an hour is no small feat. Yet this he did and more, for he was going strong at the bell, and, take it from us, no one was even weary.

What he did, among other things, was this. He spoke with a convincing earnestness that at no time was preachy. He has a well modulated speaking voice, very distinct enunciation, and a message. He gave it to us with a sympathetic attitude, and to top it all, sprinkled the whole with a humorous side line of quizzical wit that invariably brought down the house.

To hear Morgan is to know that he is thoroughly alive and vitally interested in life. The future holds no terrors for him because he is too busy living and planning. We admire a man who ages gracefully.

—Marion Redford.

ON BEING CAGEY

"If I had a kid sister seventeen, I'd teach her to be cagey," writes Katherine Brush in the January College Humor. "I should make cageyness the subject of Lessons, One, Two, Five and Seven. The point is that it's the thing above all other things that extreme youth is likely to lack."

"I should tell her that drinking isn't cagey," she rambles on, "and that necking isn't very cagey either. I should not join the croaking chorus that calls such things immoral, because I don't believe it. I should simply submit to kid sister that they aren't clever. I should give reasons. I should present proof. She should watch and observe. If she has any sense at all, it ought to dawn on her presently that attractive women, drunk, are not rare, but that there is no such thing as an 'attractive drunk' woman. She should be told that the most sophisticated women in the world—the beautiful, naughty ones with Hipsano—Stizas and diamond bracelets and boudoirs like Madame du Barry—seldom drink much. They have too much respect for the beauty and femininity and allure that is their stock in trade to dissipate it in a flock of cocktails."

JUNIOR HIGH SHADOWS COLLEGE

There was a debate last week. About ninety people attended. The Junior High school had the largest attendance. About twenty-five kids, under fourteen years of age were there.

Utah State College gave the junior high students a close race for second honors. Approximately twenty college students packed the room—with note books, because some teacher forced them to outline the arguments. Four of these dragged in during the last rebuttal.

A spattering of professors graced the room.

We don't know whether the above is a news article or material for our joke column. Anyway, something should be done about it. A college is supposed to have a few thinking, intellectual people in its midst.

WARNING

All my life
 I have been wearing my clothes
 Out of dream—stuff.
 Now, I am naked.

Love is blind. So is a cat the first five days.

There is nothing more terrible to see than ignorance in action.—Andy Gump.

With formals and a million other dances scheduled for this quarter, needless college boys will soon be writing to their dads saying: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of my parties.—University of Washington Daily."

Joke freely with the monkey but don't pull his tail.—Ancient proverb.

The "no captain" plan will be inaugurated by the 1930 University of Nebraska football team and effective September 1, 1931, captains of all other teams will be eliminated.

Where formerly the newspaper's influence was through its editorial columns, it now has its greatest effect through its advertisements. Advertisements tend to make people dissatisfied with what they have and wish for better things and the race is benefited. This nation is building through advertising instead of government.—Wm. Allen White.

MEN ARE DEVILS SAYS AGGIE COED

Marriage is Like Playing the Stock Market, Claims Girl

MARIE CALK
 "I've always maintained that men are devils. Why do we fall for them? I don't know. I have hope at our vascular cardiacs. After all men are only bipeds the same as any other anthrosold and though the poet does claim they divide I have my doubts. But people are getting married all the time now and half of them are women.
 Marriage is like playing the stock market on borrowed money. The more you invest the bigger risk you take and the more you have to pay back in the end. When a woman marries, she may think she has the prize but she may turn out to be a surprise or a consolation prize.
 If a man has brains, too often that's all that can be said in his favor; if he's brawny he thinks he must get his respect from Darwin's theory; if he's good looking he of all the world is the sexiest; if he's good looking; if he's homely he has an inferiority complex; if he's accomplished he's arrogant; if he isn't he's a bore.
 A woman takes a man like her, he thinks she's a promiscuous oculator. If she doesn't believe him he thinks she's suspicious. If she does she's a nitwit. When a girl is intelligent a man thinks she's bull headed. If she's dumb he takes advantage of her. When a woman drinks and smokes with a man he says she's driving him to the devil. If she fasts and prays over him to reform him he says she's driving him to the devil. If a man marries a slugging vine he wants a helpmate. If he marries an intelligent woman he wants a playmate.
 This has all been said before but in the face of its truthfulness I can think of one thing a girl could never do had she a man and that would be another woman."

What? In This Weather?

The spirit of the springtime is the spirit of youth, the young green world is a glorious play-ground. We lakes and slides and sunshine call us to revels, breath deep, be happy.
 When the new green of springtime flashes over the valley, and the trees are a mist of opening leaves, we forget the still decision that the world is old. We know that for all the thousands of years it is neither old nor weary but young and glad, and looking forward to brighter years than ever before. And we dream fear and doubt and worry in the blue haze of the springtime are hazy in the sunshine of May.

We'd Call It—Advice To The Love-worm

Hey Flamm—
 There are no "Advises To The Love-worm" column in your dirty paper? There are so many students clattering with love (I) lately that it's funny.

Ho-hum!

Dear Editor—
 Why don't you write an editorial once in a while? I've noticed that, during the last two or three weeks most of your stuff has been signed by one of your reporters.

I'll bite, what?

"Students do not concentrate" is an instance of the other day. "No wonder they can't think." I admit there is some truth in that statement, but, on the other hand, I also think that too much shoulder be expected of the student.

The life of the youth of to-day is too highly pojored. He has so many things to do that he can't keep his mind on one thing. Then, too, perhaps the instructor is to blame. Perhaps, he is not capable of teaching them to concentrate. That's his job. If the student knows how to do everything before he starts to college, then what's the use of coming?

The B. Y. U. team which is coached by an ex-Olympic star is coming here with plenty of fight and scrap. Their coach was Olympic champion of the 128-pound class for three consecutive times. He has had a great deal of experience in wrestling and undoubtedly has a large squad to pick from. The B. Y. U. has thirty five or forty men reporting for work out daily, but in any event they will meet plenty of opposition.

Glen Worthington Ranked With Star Of Montana State

As great as Cat Thompson is, he does not outclass either Glen Worthington or Fred Dixon whose great play in the Commercial league of Salt Lake is reminiscent of their college hoop days.

Worthington is still one of the greatest scorers under a basket that has graced R. M. C. college ranks while Dixon is as catlike in his movements as the Cat of Montana State ever was.

State Squad Rests This Week — Allsop Shows Class on Guard-line—Meet Bobcats at Bozeman Next

The two young guards, Bennion and Young, have been performing nicely. Allsop, a speedy runner, is a good ball player. He is beginning to give Young a real race for his running guard berth. In certain respects Allsop has no doubt the edge on Bennion, but still lacks poise and the ability to stay with a man. He has probably played a little too much with his right arm. He is immediately into the man for man game. Bennion tired very plainly in the last game against the Bears. He is improving rapidly and he is beginning to discover some of the fine points

There are still many no doubt who consider the Aggie early performance as a flash with no permanence, but unless all indications are to the contrary, Dick Romney has an aggregation of players who will furnish competition of a dangerous kind to any team in the conference. The fact that the team is young, four new men being likely to win places on the first five would indicate that the youngsters will improve as the season advances. The return of Parker is expected to greatly improve the team play, and to increase scoring power.

The Aggies get their next test on January 31 and February 1 when they meet the champions Bobcats at Bozeman.
