Dr. Henry Neumann, director of the Brooklyn Society of Ethical Culture and at present the principal figure in the U. S. A. C. summer session lecture program, has been on the campus since Monday, June 23, and has delivered four lectures to unusually large audiences. Dr.

"During the last 10 or 20 years the tone of the new books has been one of spiritual defeat and disillusionment," declared Dr. Henry Neumann, in his opening lecture Monday morning. "Everything that people had been taught to honor has been ridiculed as sheer stupidity," he continued.

Dr. Neumann then pointed out a marked change from this spirit in the book of "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" by Thornton Wilder. He briefly reviewed this book, together with "The Man Who Conquered Death" and "Death Comes for the Archbishop."

Why do we press the keys we know? And never hit that key which is it that we fight for?

On Words

By L. Mark Neugebauer
We talk and sing we shout and what do we use? Why do we use words? Why do we use words of course. Then we speak of the different things we use. In our school work we study grammar, composition and so on. In our school work we are really only studying the use of words. The writer has been responsible for the way we use words. Without it all they are just words.
Very seldom do we stop to think of the words we use. It is, and what it really means.
We hear the word "word" so defined as a symbol by which we mean something. But what we would have them to know.
We like to think of words as coming down from the centuries before us. Maybe in our picture of its development we can see that man, making signs, and with his hands and grunting occasionally to make his thoughts understood. Then we see man using tools and signs to organizing them so that each word has a definite meaning.
Here we have the beginning of a language. This language is taught to their children.
The child learns to use words and signs. The child learns
