Intellectual Metamorphosis

With the opening of the new library a certain metamorphosis beginning in the daily habits of the student body will be apparent. It becomes necessary that a readjustment, a new curricula of school hours be set up to accommodate the five minute walk each way from the library to class rooms. This, of course, will not affect the whole student body but a large majority will be reached to make the change a decided one.

There will be another readjustment in connection with its opening that will mark almost entirely of the nature of metamorphosis. It will be an adjustment correspondent to the change from the "assembly hall which we call our library to the library which we want never to be reduced to an assembly hall." This metamorphosis will be the opening up from the idea that the study rooms and libraries are places to visit and chat and the adoption of the true ideal that the library is an intellectual sanctuary where study is the habit.

The building is constructed with all that goes to make it conducive to quietness and application. It has soundless floors and insulated walls, it is furnished and decorated with a pleasant, unimposing artistry that subdues raillery and enjoys respect. It will be easy to study there.
