Let's Utilize Winter

This morning we plowed through to class a half hour late and found ourselves in the snow. The snow was not too deep, but it did not fall on us. It left more earth with a two foot coating which should delight the heart of the farmer. The snow was not too deep, but it did not fall on us. We Suggest Repairs

How many showers have wandered, hot and tired after a break-out, into the shower room to find all of the very few seats occupied and the other half drenched. The water is so hot that it is unbearable. The water is so hot that it is unbearable.

Let's Study

Now that the shock of our first quarter's D's is wearing off, why don't we take a firm grasp on the knaps of our work and get on with it. The time is now. The time is now.

Prof. Cox Tours Sunny California

Professor J. M. Cox of the experimental department of the Utah State Agricultural college returned Saturday from sunny California where he has been making a preparation for experimental orchard building work in June. He was accompanied on the trip by L. A. Brown, assistant professor of horticulture, and J. H. Johnson, assistant professor of fruit growing. Prof. Cox has been working on the newly established Washington experimental farm.

Professor Cox reports considerable damage done to citrus trees in California, particularly in the San Joaquin valley. Many of the growers out there are getting better crops of fruit and were caught with heavy losses in storage. All of the groves are now being cleaned up and replanted with a wide variety of equipment. Prof. Cox is now in California, particularly in the San Joaquin valley, where he is working on the newly established Washington experimental farm.

The purpose of the orchard building experiments is to determine whether the peach orchards of the State can be successfully and profitably planted on the spruce orchards which have caused considerable loss in many orchards in the past few years.

In addition to the orchard building work, the testing of new varieties of fruit trees is being carried on in the experimental station. Prof. Cox is now in California, particularly in the San Joaquin valley, where he is working on the newly established Washington experimental farm.

Dr. H. L. Hood of the U. S. department of agriculture, who has been working on the newly established Washington experimental farm, is now in California, particularly in the San Joaquin valley, where he is working on the newly established Washington experimental farm.
