Goals, projects

College councils viewed

Editors note: The following article discussed some of the accomplishments of the college council that were formed last year under the new student government. The council consists of students who participate in their own colleges to help form policies and make changes they feel are necessary.

Reporting:

Julie Washburn
'Life Writer

Each college council is represented by a senator and the college dean. Under them are department representatives (students and faculty) who make up the college council.

College senators altogether make up the Academic Council.

Academic Council Reforms

The Academic Council has passed a number of proposals that have been passed on to the Executive Senate and the Faculty Senate. The recent library proposal concerning check-out periods for faculty originated in the Academic Council. The ROTC reform was also originated in the council as well as the pass-fail review and the PE requirement proposal.

The college of science has set as its main goal "to establish meaningful communication between students, faculty, and the college council," said Paul Baugh, science senator.

Baugh added that he and his council have been working on various aspects of improvement such as getting high school students interested in science, updating the speaker forum and making it more relevant to a greater number of students, and discussing the possibilities of getting student representation on departmental meetings.

Largest College

The recently combined college of Humanities, Arts and Social Sciences is represented by Sandra Parkinson. She has been involved in four major areas of revision.

In the language department suggestions are being made to improve language curriculum, a sociology club being planned, and aid to the faculty evaluation is being considered. Under review is a student code concerning cheating.

The college of business is represented by Brent Schow.

They have set up the council "as a facility for student suggestion and change." A suggestion box is available in the Business building for this purpose.

Action taken by the council has shortened the duration and volume of bells on the Business building. Plans for the future include organizing a Business Week.

Rosalie Scown is senator for the Education Council. The council has been reviewing course requirements. Future plans include a High School day for seniors in high school who have excelled and are interested in the college of Education at USU.

Craig Morrison, Engineering senator, said he has been involved in improving curriculum in the college. Engineering council has made suggestions for revisions and liberalization of major course studies. Other projects have been, aiding to push an ecology class, Engineering Week (Feb. 22-27), high school recruiting, study hall for the Engineering building, and a student-faculty basketball competition.

Co-ed dorms? maybe, in time

Reporting:

Annabel Grubb
'Life Writer

Coed dorms will never come to USU unless a need or necessity is aroused, according to Claude Burtenshaw, vice-president of Student Affairs.

He feels that there is no necessity for bringing men and women students together in a coed situation at this time.

Burtenshaw's definition of coed dorms is, for example, the present state of the High Rises and Richards Hall, in which the students share the cafeteria and the use of the three lounges.

Best Students Used

It was suggested that a screening process be used to provide the "right" caliber of students, with respect to moral values, for a coed dorm. Dean Burtenshaw explained that the obvious screening process, that of grade point, would never be accurate enough to determine the moral values of a student.

Frank Fraser, president of Inter-Residence Council, stated that a coed dorm, in the form of a structure similar to Richards Hall, where one wing would be for women and the other for men, would constitute an ideal situation.

Fraser believes that an arrangement of this sort would force the students who are participating, to rely more on themselves in developing their independence, rather than the university.

By bringing the two wings together for dorm classes in the evening, faculty exchanges, and combining the student governments of both, Fraser feels that this would cause the two wings to participate in true co-educational states.

According to Fraser, the purpose of a university is to present an environment conducive to mental development as well as educational opportunities. He feels that his definition of coed dorms would accomplish this.

Fraser contends that before a coed dorm is to be considered, the public should be educated as to the definition of coed dorms and their advantages and disadvantages.

Hospital
life:
dismal,
restrictive

Editor:

As a former patient of the Utah State Hospital, I feel I have to refute the "detail life" description as reported in Student Life, Feb. 10.

I didn't attend the panel myself, but I'm sure that those who did were in for a real snow job. To get a better idea of the hospital at Provo, one might wish to make a visit there sometime.

Upon entering the grounds, there is a sign which says, "Please observe normal rules of social conduct." Apparently the doctors and staff workers ignore it, for they disregard normal conduct rules as they take their counts of the prisoners, or rather, patients, and herd them out for meals like so much cattle.

I don't suppose any patients on the panel mentioned the prison-like atmosphere at the hospital. I'm stymied when I try to recall what the one patient might have been talking about concerning getting involved "in the activities." What activities? Shooting pool for one hour each week? Activities?

Then there's the one about the guy who was talking about how he felt like he was doing a job on the outside. Yeah, I remember that -- washing dishes 30 hours a week without pay. Then there were the times during total ward restrictions -- these are designed to punish everybody if a patient runs away or someone doesn't clean up his or her room just so. Total ward restrictions featured a variety of jobs "just like on the outside" -- scrubbing floors, toilets, walls, everything in sight, for hours. After you're finished, you relax over two pieces of bread and a glass of milk for dinner.

No shock treatments, huh? What do you think they do when you rebel and demand to be treated like a human being? When you demand the right to use the phone and call friends and relatives? You refuse to go up and wash dishes or slack up on your "assignments?" That's where Ward MS-2 comes in and if that doesn't rate as shock treatment, I don't know what shock means.

In MS-2 they have a bunch of human vegetable and guinea pigs. People are there with nothing to do. One guy is sitting in the corner on his knees and elbows, smelling of urine. These people are so far out they can't talk. The great moment in their lives comes when they get their diet of a cigarette every few hours or more. They put me there for four hours and that was shocking. I was crying to get out after five minutes.

I noticed one true statement in the article: "It can happen to anyone." It can, does, and can happen to the best of us. I know that if anyone had experienced what I did prior to my imprisonment in the hospital, they would have reacted the same as I did.

I used 15 pages on a research paper last quarter, telling of the ordeals of mental hospital experience. Perhaps this will suffice to throw a more realistic light on the "detail life" of a mental hospital. It's pure hell. One great thing I must say about that experience though, is this: When you come out of there, you know what freedom is. If for nothing else, the deep realization and appreciation I gained of freedom after Provo made the stay worthwhile to some degree.

Displeased
with Laos
action

Editor:

Perhaps this effort represents another exercise in frustration and futility as was last May's Cambodia protest telegram, but I would like to invite all similarly inclined persons to sign the following Laos protest telegram:

"Dear President Nixon: "We, the undersigned concerned Americans, wish to express our displeasure with your decision to invade yet another neutral country in a futile attempt to protect the Vietnamization Program. The invasion of Laos represents the latest addition to a tragically long list of purportedly "decisive" United States efforts to obtain a military solution to the primarily political problems of Southeast Asia. Therefore, we urge the cessation of all aggressive Allied actions while you earnestly and realistically seek viable diplomatic solutions at the Paris Peace Conference. (Signatures)"

This message plus signatures will be telegraphed to President Nixon and to each of the four Utah Congressional Representatives.

To solicit signatures, I will be stationed, pen, clipboard, and tin cup in hand, near the entrance to the Hub during my lunch hour, 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 17 and 18.

Military talk deserves
notice

Editor:

We understand that the head of military science at USU, Col. Joseph Gappa, will discuss President Nixon's "Vietnamization" policy Thursday at 8 p.m. We feel this topic is of vital interest to students as it touches us all in some way, and perhaps, may be a life or death question.

We have been told that "Vietnamization" is going very well. This idea borders, perhaps, on the absurd. The fact remains that we are supposedly strengthening Vietnam and the Vietnamese Army so that they can take over our war (their war?). Success is supposed to be imminent; we should soon be able to leave the South to fight the North in peace.

We believe the Colonel should be asked, "What have we really accomplished?" It appears that we have, 1. over-extended the capabilities of the South Vietnamese Army; 2. operationalized the "Domino Theory" in reverse; and, 3. exposed neutral nations to Red Chinese aggression.

For the South Vietnamese Army to lose in the present incursions can only lower their already poor prestige with the Vietnamese people and will probably involve large amounts of American troops to bail the ARVN out. Internally, Vietnam and its social and economic policies can only suffer further set-backs in its attempt to unify a badly-divided country.

What can Colonel Gappa say to these charges? Will it make his presentation of the "Vietnamization" policy any easier? Come Thursday evening to UC 327 and ask him.

Off limits parking noted

OFF LIMITS — Owners of cars parked in front of the physical education building are doing so illegally, according to Utah State campus police.

By now, many students may have learned that parking in front of the new physical education building is off limits, even though the curbing is not painted yellow.

Willard G. Saunders, chief of campus police, has announced that there are no provisions for parking on roadways or yellow-marked curbs on campus and the curbing on Seventh North from Eighth to Twelfth East is also off limits.

Saunders also said that "with the growth of the university, all patrons ... are reminded that crosswalks should be safe havens for pedestrians at all hours of the day and night." But then said that some crosswalks lack proper lighting at night and are considered dangerous.

Summer quarter ready; procedures planned

The procedure for admission to summer quarter has been finalized, announced Dr. Ellvert H. Himes, director of summer quarter.

Packets will be processed automatically for all undergraduates and graduate students who are enrolled in any one of the previous quarters.

If a student is not in attendance during these quarters, he should request an admission form from the office of admission and records.

The summer quarter will be highlighted this year by a number of workshops and seminars featuring distinguished scholars and visiting faculty.

College councils performance since fall quarter considered

Scholarships Stressed

College of Agriculture under Terry Simmonds, senator, has been involved in organizing an Agricultural Scholarship Folder. Another project underway is developing a college newspaper. The college council is also proposing an amendment to have graduation ceremonies held after every quarter. Also, a film presentation is being made high school relations purposes.

Linda Ballow, Family Life senator, is presently working on getting an improved study area for the Family Life building. Her college is also involved in the campus day care center project. Other projects underway are high school relations efforts, evaluation of classes and credits offered, and spring cleaning effort through the homemaking arts class.

To Pick Assistant Dean

Jim Goodyear, Natural Resources senator, is presently involved in helping choose the new Assistant Dean for the college, along with the other college council members. The group has requested calculators and keypunch machines for student use in FZ building. This has been acted upon and the college is now in the process of obtaining them.

Council has requested that student teacher evaluation on the college level be continued for the rest of the school year and be made available to the students. Also, the council provides a flier box for suggestions relating to the college.

The Academic Council as a whole will help pick the outstanding faculty members for the two $1,000 rewards given by the faculty senate.

New senators and council members will be chosen this spring at the same time as the ASUSU elections.

Workers discuss unions and war

A panel of three people associated with unions and the working class in Utah discussed "Union and the War" last Friday night in the UC auditorium.

Wayne Holley, a worker at Geneva Steel works; Lucille Harrington, the widow of a retired mine worker; and Joe Bird, a veteran of the Kennecott smelters, all gave their views on the effect of the Vietnam war on the individual worker.

Holley, who comes from Utah County, stressed that the average worker is being hurt by the Vietnam war, and that "objective conditions now exist to have factory workers participate in political action."

Mrs. Harrington expressed the view that the attitude of the workers could change as less attention is paid to the problems of the poor and the cities.

She stated that "The poor and workers' taxes pay for the war, and their sons have to fight it."

She went on to say that the workers and poor will not continue to tolerate this.

Bird spoke on what the unions are doing to fight the pollution caused by Kennecott, and to help stop the war and "the inflation it causes." He said the union is fighting for protection of workers from sulfur - di-oxide.

He further termed the Vietnam war as "cannibalistic" and said that "chemistry and science may be used to fight the war, but not to fight pollution caused by the factory."

Bird went on to say that the concern for these problems is so strong in the labor groups that the "militancy is coming to the unions" on these two issues.

The panel was sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance, an organization on campus.

Write poetry? enter contest

Students are invited to enter the annual Lyric Poetry contest sponsored by the English department, announced professor Veneta L. Nielsen, who is in charge of the competition.

Professor Thomas Lyon will be chairman of the judges. Working with him will be professor Coralie M. Beyers and Dr. John Scherling. All are members of the English faculty.

Entrants should submit their poems to one of the judges or to professor Nielsen before April 1. Entrants may submit as many as five poems but no fewer than three. They should provide three copies of each poem entered, to expedite judging. The winner will receive the lyric poetry plaque and will have his first place poem published. Winners of second and third will receive book prizes.

Aggie demise: Marv, Nate in sick bay!

Reporting:

Greg Hansen
Sports Editor

Denver, Colo. -- Collegiate hockey has been the sports pastime of this small campus for years, but it's evident that the basketball fervor of Denver University has finally come to rest atop the athletic heap.

Chanting "We want the NIT!", Pioneer partisans shared the glee of the Denver cage team here Monday night with a 96-74 romp over Utah State -- a loss which could eliminate USU from post-season play.

Denver literally blew the Aggies off the court in the rout, and with their 11th consecutive triumph they've got every reason to expect a bid from either the NCAA or NIT. Meanwhile, USU (now 19-5), looks little less potent than a Playboy chorus line.

Intimidate Court

To be sure, the Du Arena (capacity 3,000-- some 3,800 were crowded in) intimidated the Aggies. It has to rank among the country's worst facilities and when the out-of-bounds line has about 50 pair of feet dangling over it, you've got to be a little bit wary.

Denver cut off the Aggie offense with a 1-3-1 zone defense and USU did little to compensate for the sticky trap. Marv Roberts, weakened by a bout with the flu, scored under double figures for the first time in his career. Marv hit one of 10 field goal attempts and had five points. Nate Williams -- another victim of the flu bug -- collected seven points, which in itself wrote finis to any Aggie win ideas.

Denver took a 43-38 halftime lead after a see-saw first half. Terry Wakefield dazzled the crowd with 18 points in the initial half -- the only reason USU stayed in the game at all.

But when Wakefield went cold in the second half, Denver rolled to a 67-46 advantage and breezed to the triumph. Willie Cherry, a jumping jack forward, had 32 points to pace the attack.

Only Wakefield with 22 and Ron Hatch with 10 could score in double figures for the Aggies, but Walt Bees and Ed Epps were very impressive.

Bees -- despite a fine game--was benched for about half the actual scoreboard time -- while Epps was lifted continuously while proving he was the only Aggie capable of penetrating the DU defense.

With a healthy Roberts and Williams, Utah State may have made a contest of the debacle. But with Denver shooting over 50 percent; out-rebounding USU by 27 rebounds; and neutralizing any U-State offense; there was no doubt as to which one was the best team on the court Monday night.

Senior guard Ed Epps has been playing a bigger role in the Utah State game plan since an eye injury slowed Jeff Tebbs.

Ramblers lose heated contest

USU frosh, minus leading scorer Glen Hansen, dropped their fifth game of the season to an upset minded Idaho State University frosh 90-87.

Hansen was ejected from the game during the first half when he and an ISU player got in an argument. Hansen, who has been averaging 22 points per game, scored only four points before he was ejected.

ISU lead 48-47 at the half but Utah State, lead by Gary Erickson, took the lead at 78-74 with six minutes remaining. ISU had retaken the lead 80-78 when Gary Erickson was called for a technical foul. ISU gained four points and put the game away. The win was sweet revenge for ISU who had been waxed by USU 103-75 in Logan earlier in the year.

Gary Erickson was the leading scorer for the Ramblers with 31 points, while Jerry Miller lead ISU with 23. Jim Boatwright netted 22 and Dan Palley 17 for the Ramblers.

USU out-rebounded ISU 51-47 and shot 50 per cent from the field compared to 42 for ISU. ISU had all five of their starters in double figures compared to only three for ISU.

Utah State will take a break before returning to action against Weber State on Feb. 23. Weber may have a few surprises planned for the Ramblers. Since USU waxed Weber in Ogden the Kittens have defeated College of Southern Idaho. CSI is the number one junior college team in the nation and are the only team to defeat the Ramblers twice this season.

Get medical advice

Reporting:

Graham Clark
AP Writer

By simply dialing a telephone, a German had been able to find out about the weather, the winning lottery numbers, what's playing at the movies, a good recipe for dinner, and how high the rivers are running.

Now, he also can get medical advice.

In Hamburg, for instance, you dial the number 1159 and a recorded voice asks:

"Do you have an insatiable thirst, dry tongue, muscular weakness and lose weight although you eat a lot?"

If yes, the voice goes on without waiting for an answer, then you better consult a doctor because you may be suffering from diabetes.

In the two years that Hamburg's dial-a-doctor service has been available, well over a million persons have telephoned for information on such matters as family planning, signs of cancer, exercise, polio vaccine, health at Christmas and venereal disease.

Silver contest set

Undergraduate women are eligible to compete for Reed and Barton's "Silver Opinion" Scholarships. Entry deadline is March 31.

Entrants must choose the three best setting combinations of silver, crystal and china from twelve designs illustrated. One $500 scholarship, a $300 scholarship, a $250 scholarship, three $200 scholarships, three

The caller remains anonymous and this encourages those to call who might be embarrassed to go to a clinic for advice. "We have noted that the number of persons attending clinics specializing in the complaint with which a particular recording deals rises by some 20 a day," says Dieter Schmiedt, the journalist who writes and records the scripts.

"People write in and suggest that we do a recording on baby care, colds and flu and so forth, and we choose what we feel to be the most important or topical subject. A panel of doctors writes the script and then I translate it into laymen's language. Before the script is recorded, the doctors check it over," he added.

"The service," he said, "is not for the sick but for the healthy. Our object is to keep them that way by getting them to seek medical help as soon as they recognize something may be wrong."

$100 awards and 100 other awards of $75 worth of china and crystal will be given.

Scholarship representative for USU is Brenda Bingham. Contest applications and information can be obtained as girls make preferences for the Preference Ball at the booth on second floor in UC or at 715 East 9th North, apartment 2 or call 753-1502.

Can there be life on Mars?

Reporting:

Robert Kuesterman
AP Writer

Despite Mariner spacecraft photographs showing a barren surface more rugged than the moon's, a USU scientist thinks there may be plant life on Mars.

Dr. Frank Salisbury, professor in Plant Science, says if plant life is found on the red planet, it probably won't be like anything found on earth.

Salisbury finds little support among his colleagues.

Scientists have known for years that Mars is cold and bleak, with an atmosphere devoid of oxygen, the life-giving gas of earth.

In 1969, Mariner spacecraft sent on fly-bys of Mars returned pictures and other data showing conditions even more severe than had been thought. Nitrogen was not found in the atmosphere.

Exposed To Cold

But for the past twelve years, Salisbury has been studying plant life under laboratory conditions approximating those known to exist on Mars.

Beginning at Colorado State University in 1959 and continuing at Utah State since 1966, Salisbury has exposed plants to extreme cold and high intensity ultraviolet lights, two of the factors that make Mars something less than the garden spot of the galaxy.

Working under a grant from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), Salisbury found that most plants subjected to intense ultraviolet light quickly shriveled and died.

Several grasses and corn endured the torture for about 50 hours before dying.

Then, a tough tree, the Austrian pine, survived nearly 700 hours.

"That showed it's possible for advanced plant life to withstand Mars' ultraviolet light," Salisbury says.

Become Dormant

Most flowers become dormant when the temperature drops to freezing. But Salisbury, burrowing under five to seven feet of snow in the mountains east of Logan, found several that don't.

A flower appropriately named Spring Beauty lies inactive during the summer, sprouts during the winter and develops a flower in the early spring, although it is often still covered by several feet of snow.

Thus, contends Salisbury, it is possible that some Martian plants could have Austrian Pine's resistance to ultraviolet light and Spring Beauty's penchant for cold.

Salisbury and his students have also discovered that some plants have a way of regulating their temperatures, much as the human body cools itself through evaporation of perspiration.

He discovered the Cocklebur leaf performs the same trick, turning cooler or warmer than the surrounding air. At 95 degrees Fahrenheit it remains the same temperature as the surrounding air—apparently the temperature at which the Cocklebur is comfortable.

Salisbury claims this discovery has opened up numerous avenues of important investigation pertaining to extra-terrestrial life.

No Funds

But NASA doesn't agree, and has suggested that the leaf temperature work be terminated. Emphasis is now shifting to studies of enzymes (the proteins controlling the chemical reactions in cells) in cold-loving plants. Electron microscope studies are also underway. These could help in the understanding of Martian life.

"There is one observation about Mars that hasn't been explained, and they're not talking about it because it embarrasses them," Salisbury says.

He refers to one of the earliest and continuing observations of Mars, the changing patterns of its surface with the seasons.

The markings fade with the Martian winter, except for a few areas near the equator, then become more defined in the spring, beginning near the polar regions.

Before Mariner, many scientists thought water from the frozen polar caps brought life to the Martian landscape in spring and summer. Salisbury still thinks that may be true.

"We're still entitled not to have our minds made up that there is no life," he says, adding:

"But if there is Martian life, it's Martian life, and it's wrong to talk about lichen or earth-type plants."
