David Brower, former executive director of the Sierra Club will speak at Utah State tonight at 8 p.m. in Chase FAC.

Here in conjunction with Conservation Week, Brower has been described by former Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall as "the most effective single person on the cutting edge of conservation." Brower was the executive director of the Sierra Club for 17 years.

During that time Brower lead the club's drives against "unwise uses of resources and abuses of the world's wilderness areas."

"A genius"

"He's a genius -- his imagination runs like a kaleidoscope with thoughts and creative ideas," has said Ansel Adams, famed photographer. Brower is presently president of the Friends of the Earth, an active conservation group.

He and his group have taken on highway departments, the Bureau of Reclamation, Walter Hickle and the oil-pipeline people, the timber companies and anyone else who they felt were harming the environment.

Brower, a college dropout, holds honorary degrees from several universities and has been a favorite speaker on college campuses. He was the founder and editor of the Exhibit-Format Series of the Sierra Club. Since the series publication it has netted $10 million dollars.

"I didn't think people would pay that kind of money for beauty," Brower said about the success of the series.

'Life interviews candidates

Editor's note: Too often, students are faced with the problem of voting in ASUSU primary elections without knowing much more than the names of the candidates.

To alleviate this situation, Student Life has interviewed of the six presidential candidates. Contained in each interview is a sampling of the philosophy and goals of the candidates. No longer will Student Life be satisfied with printing a few paragraphs of candidate platforms where each hopeful consciously - unconsciously skirts real issues and paints himself to be the answer to all problems at Utah State because he has a shining smile.

We hope students will take the time to read these interviews and then vote for one of the candidates.

Interviews are on page 3. Pictures of the six candidates are to the right and below.

griping;
start
voting

Six presidential candidates and a bevy of other political aspirants face a runoff today in the ASUSU primary election.

Each candidate is hopeful of a large student voter turnout, but each realizes past elections have failed to draw the interest they should have drawn.

That's what we would like to see changed. Why is it that students won't bother to vote for candidates, yet they will gripe all through the next year about student government not being "representative."

Student government can be the student voice if students will take a few minutes to mark their ballot or write in someone of their choice.

But will it this year?

Each year, the Student Life office is deluged with students complaining about student government. But did they bother in the previous election? "No," is the most common response.

In this case, we have no pity for their plight. If they can't be bothered to take a simple step toward establishing an effective, representative government, we can't feel sorry for them.

Rather, our sympathy is extended to those persons who do take the time to vote, and those who campaign before an apathetical student body. This is what sickens us.

Too often, students say that even if they did vote, it wouldn't do any good because student government is nothing more than a puppet of the administration. If this is so, then why don't these students rectify the situation by voting for their candidates — the persons they think will do the best job of representing student interests.

Maybe this has been the situation in the past; maybe it still exists within the current ASUSU administration. But if it does, in fact, exist now, it will continue to exist until you do something about it.

Student government can be much more effective than it is now, if you will let it.

No candidate running this year believes all that could be done by student government, is being done. If everything was being done, there would be no need for holding elections each spring. Instead, the status quo would be maintained with straw-filled dummies propped up in chairs in ASUSU offices.

Many students think primary elections are unimportant. "I'll wait until the finals," some say. That's no good.

What if your candidate doesn't make it into the finals? It will be your fault because you couldn't be bothered to give them a boost by marking an "X" next to their name.

Complaining and crying about ineffective government is worthless unless you can say you did your part to see that your candidate at least had a shot at the election post.

Get busy. The effort you might spend griping could be spent voting! The polls are open all day today.

The next step is yours.

Candidates speak out

Steve Dunn

"Students want to be listened to," Steve Dunn, ASUSU presidential candidate stated, "but the majority are afraid to get involved."

Dunn advocates bringing the student government to the students. Not necessarily executive council meetings, he stated, but question-and-answer periods with the officers, administration and students to bring ideas out in the open.

When questioned on student government participation in national and international policies, Dunn stated that he thought it was "great that students participate in political groups."

Provide Opportunities

"I don't think that the Executive Council should support a particular political candidate or issue, for instance, but should provide opportunities for students to become involved and aware of these activities," he said.

Dunn blamed the apathy towards the Buzzer on last year's publication. "I don't see how we can go and cut out this year's book with the mixed feelings that are still present over a yearly publication," he said.

Money Investigation

Investigating the money situation involved with student government was one proposal suggested by Dunn.

He brought out the point that in the poll conducted earlier this year showing that students were dissatisfied with the amount of money that was being given to athletics. "If we need it, let's build it up," he said, "if we don't let's do away with athletics and divert the money somewhere else."

"Personally, I feel that we have received national acclaim through our athletic program, and I feel that it is important, but with the amount of controversy, it needs to be investigated."

Certain Controls

Dunn agreed with many of the other candidates that there was a certain amount of administrative control over the student government. He attributed this to the fact that they do decide how much of the student fees the student government will get.

"I'd like to see the students get more money. If students become more involved in the student government, we could go a lot further in this area."

Sondhi Limthongkul

Sondhi Limthongkul feels that any decisions concerning the Buzzer must come from the majority of the students. He proposes that appropriation of funds be postponed until fall quarter registration.

At that time students would have the opportunity to vote whether they want it at the same time they turned in their packets. If only a minority are in favor, a small organization will be formed and money appropriated to meet their quota.

Limthongkul answered the question concerning student government involvement in national and international affairs by saying we should first strive to solve university problems. He does feel, however, that students face a responsibility to get involved in national and international affairs and should seek necessary changes through legal channels. The important thing is to select a priority issue and have the courage to stick with it until the trouble is eliminated.

Relation to University

"The student government could relate more effectively to the entire university community through a number of ways. We have had foreign students on campus since 1911," said Limthongkul. The idea of these students is to get an education and "get the heck out." Being a foreign student himself, he said that as long as he is a student here he is a citizen of USU and therefore should have the opportunity to be involved in student government.

One way to get students involved is to hold ASUSU meetings in different places to give more students a chance to go to the meetings. He would also see that minutes of the senate meetings be published. This would encourage more feedback which is needed to bridge the communication gap between students and their government.

He would like to see the administration have less control over student government. If co-operation is impossible it is up to the leader to have the courage to take action in favor of the will of the students.

Pushes Academics

Limthongkul feels that academic achievement is the most important function of the university. According to him, USU is declining in this area in comparison with other Utah universities. "Student government

J. J. Platt

"The biggest gap on this campus is between the Mormon and non-Mormon," said James J. Platt, candidate for ASUSU president.

"I want to relax church oriented restrictions, restrictions come from fear, as well as explaining, in a human way, to those who are afraid of what is going on. In this way tensions on both sides can be relaxed."

The main thing I propose is a fall registration questionnaire in which students would be asked what they wanted and how much money it should be allotted. (Pertinent questions concerning the Buzzer, how much time for spring vacation break, and others.) I feel that if government doesn't come down from its "Ivory Tower" it's finished."

Platt challenged the other candidates to place their priorities in the right place and said they would serve only six hours if they were elected. "If I were elected I would be a full time president and not so much a full time student. Any studentbody officer that completes college in four years has not been the best possible officer."

What Needs Doing

"I believe that it is time for student government to do, not only what can be done, but also what needs to be

Rick White

Academic evaluation was stressed heavily by Rick White, ASUSU presidential candidate, in an interview-press conference Tuesday.

White proposed investigation into areas such as advising students, freshman orientation, and grading and testing.

Strengthened college councils and stronger teacher evaluation are two areas White felt could be expanded.

Buzzer Future?

In answer to the question of the future of the Buzzer, White stated that the main reason there was so much controversy over the Buzzer was because of the dissatisfaction with last year's book.

"I would wait until after this year's book is released and then decide on its future. There are several alternatives to the yearbook which could be looked into by a task force committee and then submitted to the students who would decide on its future."

The theme of White's campaign is to make the people feel like they're being better represented.

Mistrust—Dislike

"Mistrust and dislike of student government is created when the students don't understand what it is doing," he said.

He proposed several ways to try and bring the students closer to their representative government.

needs the support of students. We cannot afford to have people go away with adverse thoughts about USU."

In addition, he said, "Resident Halls are part of education but people in the dorms have been left out. There is an urgent need to include them in student affairs to overcome the idea that dorms are simply places to eat and sleep."

Limthongkul strongly urges people to vote for the presented issues rather than for the person.

done (as determined) by the students. A president must be in tune with the students he represents and should not follow the dictates of undesired tradition or be swayed by an administration that is not able to be totally aware of the needs and wants of the students.

Proposed Changes

Some of the things Platt is interested in changing are:

(1) The never ending parking problem.

(2) The raking over students suffer every year in buying and selling books. (Perhaps a student run class book library).

(3) The unfortunate gap between Mormon and non-Mormon.

(4) The question of iron-clad housing contracts, as well as the unappealing living conditions in the dorms.

(5) Making USU an exciting place to live and grow rather than just a place to get a degree.

(6) The quality of the library and its operating hours.

(7) The vacation period between winter and spring quarter.

(8) The possibility of presidential cabinet-type appointments.

These ideas include:

—having a dorm representative or the IRC president as a member of the Executive Council.

—including representatives from foreign students of minority groups on the Executive Council.

—an Executive Council round table which would meet with the heads of the different organizations or students in general to find out student feelings.

—having student officers who are not afraid of criticism

—a cooperation between Executive Council and the campus news media, (Student Life, KUSU and campus news reel) to help inform students of what the government is doing.

Control of Students

Administrative control of student government was a question proposed to all candidates. White stated that he didn't believe that "student government should be a rubber stamp for the administration, but should be a strong voice in dealing with the administration in behalf of the students."

He proposed having a student on the Institutional Council to help decide university policies.

Dennis Everton

Dennis Everton, presidential candidate for USU student body office, said at a press conference Tuesday that he would follow the decision of the student majority concerning publication of a Buzzer for the coming year. He suggests that students be made aware of how much and where appropriated funds for this book come from.

In relation to student government participating in national and international affairs, Everton said. "I do not think the Executive Council should act because we are fearful of something. I do believe that we should help set up a referendum and aid in financing speakers on controversial subjects."

Everton said he would support recognition of political parties on campus as long as they respected the student code. They would be allowed the same services that are available for other student organizations. For example, they would no longer have to pay rent for campus areas for their organizational functions.

Unite Students

"Divided we fall," he said. "The only way the student government and the university community can be united is through communication: people meeting together for a common cause." If elected, he said he would promote a committee for off-campus housing that would not only aid the student but also help him to relate to the citizens of Logan.

Everton plans to inform the students who the Executive Council members are and where they can be found.

In addition, issues discussed in the meeting would be made public. He said, "Leaders should leave their offices and move within the campus groups to promote interest in student government."

Work With Administrators

Everton feels the administration and student government should work together. "We should take advantage of the wisdom of the administrative leaders. These people have met with the Executive Council in the past and the results have been very effective," he said.

He does not feel that the students here are apathetic. In his opinion, if the student government would reach out and approach the individual we would have the kind of participation we desire.

Dayne Goodwin

"We are the only anti-war activist candidates and we are not joining the establishment, we want to change it."

This is the main platform for the YSA campaign, said Dayne Goodwin, write-in candidate for ASUSU president.

"In the YSA campaign," Goodwin said, "we have six candidates running so that we can implement what we propose. We must formulate a program and show students that things can be changed. We are interested in constructive meaningful change. We want to be elected on the basis of support for our platform - not as individuals."

Stand on War

When asked if student government should take a stand on ending war, Goodwin replied, "I feel that it is easy to find out what the majority want, then do it. If the majority have a position, then the people representing those students should be happy to represent them."

"My first concern is with the educational campus problems, but also I am concerned with social change. The government is spending far more on the war in Vietnam than on education and until we end the war it hurts education."

"Students see the senate officers as sitting in a chamber alienated from them. We need people to run for office on a program for students needs, we have a complete platform with four major plans.

Proposals Stated

The four plans of the platform along with a few of its 36 proposals follow:

—educational reform—a student-faculty control of the university. This could be done with control over budget decisions, student publications and hiring and firing of faculty members.

—Black, Chicano and Indian studies—decent living conditions. No more exploitation of students. Proposed quality housing, student owned and operated food services, dorm residents make dorm policies.

—establishment of a drug clinic and adequately financing it —free education. Education is a social function. This would abolish tuition, give an annual salary for students, and a student owned and operated book store.

—Social change—the university should fight for a social justice and progress, this could be done by ending the war, ending the draft, fighting for liberation of women and oppressed national minorities, and full civil liberties.

Grid workouts now underway

More than 80 spring football hopefuls went through the motions Saturday in spring's initial grid workouts. Coach Chuck Mills and staff guided the griders through two workouts, looking forward to

May 1 Blue-White game. Returning letterman on both the offensive and defensive platoons are the main hope for 1971's outlook, although 19 junior college transfers and 20 candidates up from the frosh team will help round out the squad. Dotting the squad is All-American candidate Bob Wicks, a two-year letterman at wide receiver. Also back for their third season are gifted halfback John Strycula, Al Faccinto Dennis Ferguson, Dave Cox, Craig Smith and Bob Galeazzi. Touted newcomers up from the frosh include Craig Clark, Kenny Nelson, Doug Pehrson and Arnie Zimmerman.

One-year lettermen include standouts Ed Giles, Wendell Brooks, Mike Corrigan, Steve Coupee, Eldon Liu, Tom Murphy, Mike Jones, and many others. The Aggies' 1971 slate includes such outstanding teams as Nebraska, Kansas State, Memphis State, Wyoming and San Diego State. Last year Utah State surprised the prognosticators by splitting ten games, defeating powerhouses Memphis State and Kentucky along the way.

"Money is not available to great to several worthwhile projects, but funds from cutbacks and marginal balance could provide loans for them. These dollars would be used, repaid, and reused for many new activities which would pay for themselves."

YOUNG SOCIALIST ALLIANCE ELECTION CAMPAIGN

"A Student Program for Student Needs"

Student government should serve the needs of the students - not the administration vote for the principled, complete platform - not the individual

YSA PLATFORM

- I. EDUCATIONAL REFORM
— Student-faculty control of the university, administrators serve the university
- II. DECENT LIVING CONDITIONS
— No more exploitation of students: on or off campus
- III. FREE EDUCATION
— education is a social function —
College should be available to everyone
- IV. SOCIAL CHANGE
— The university should fight for social justice and progress

Our complete program of 36 points plus further explanation is available in a six-page Campaign Pamphlet at the YSA Table either in the UB Basement or the Library Foyer.

We will all be running in the final election - all as write-in candidates if necessary - we will speak at your meeting, to your group, or debate any candidate - call 753-0748
