

What Is Financial Health?

“A big part of financial freedom is having your heart and mind free from worry about the what-ifs of life.”

-Suze Orman, Personal Finance

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, a U.S. government agency, talked to consumers and experts from all over the country and narrowed down four elements to financial health (2015):

1. Feeling in control
2. Capacity to absorb a financial shock
3. On track to meet goals
4. Flexibility to make choices

Another way to think about it: Financial health is the feeling of having financial security and financial freedom of choice, in the present and when considering the future (Garman & Forgue, 2018).

So how do you find that feeling of financial control that leads to financial freedom? Working on your financial health. We may all define financial health differently, but here are some common checkpoints for most people:

- Age 10: learn to save money up for something you want, sell a good a service for money, donate money, use money to do something kind for someone else.
- Age 20: learn to budget, track income and expenses, and invest. Regularly contribute to a Roth IRA, build credit, make on-time debt payments, establish an emergency fund.
- Age 30: be financially independent from parents, pay off student debt, have a year’s worth of salary saved for retirement, have current estate planning documents.
- Age 40: have three times salary saved for retirement, increase investment contributions, pay down debt.
- Age 50: have six times salary saved for retirement, increased knowledge of aging parents’ finances, increase net worth, learn more about Social Security, Medicare, and retirement benefits and timing.
- Age 60: have eight times salary saved for retirement, pay off mortgage, debt free.

Helpful questions to ask include, “What kind of lifestyle would I like to live now and in the future?”; “Am I on track with the checkpoints at each decade?” and, “What does financial health mean to me?”

Three Tools to Aid Financial Health

The Financial Checkup®. The Financial Checkup®, a quick and easy annual assessment of your financial situation (2002), breaks down several topics like savings, retirement, and insurance. Each section comes with a worksheet that helps you evaluate where you are currently and then set goals for the future. The author of The Financial Checkup®, Alena Johnson, suggests filling out the worksheets once a year. She said:

“By evaluating your financial situation on an annual basis, you will be able to keep up with changing situations. You will also be able to evaluate progress toward your goals which will help provide peace of mind about your financial situation.”

This tool can help you reach your definition of financial health.
